WELCOME

The UQ Work Integrated Learning (WIL) Symposium, supported by ACENQ, will bring together members of the WIL community from ACENQ and UQ to share knowledge, and build insight into key issues facing WIL practitioners. This online event will include presentations by, and discussions among, academia, professional staff, industry and students. The theme this year is adaptive capacity. Specifically, the focus will be on how to develop resilient WIL opportunities and programs in times of change. The UQ WIL Symposium is a student-led WIL project.

You are welcome to visit our website.

You are invited to access ZOOM here.

ATTENTION

Attendees, please be aware that this session is being recorded. We are recording the Symposium presentations, discussions, and chat room logs because this provides a richer experience for all participants.

If you would prefer not to be captured either by voice or image in the recording, please let us know before the Symposium starts. We recognize this will be the case for some attendees and it can be accommodated.

Suggested options for attendees not wishing to be recorded:

- Turn off video and mute audio
- Use a proxy name for Zoom (attendees will still be on record with the event Coordinator)

Please note that attendees are not permitted to record without the event organizer's explicit permission.

SPONSORS

ACENQ is the Queensland chapter of the Australian Collaborative Education Network. It aims to connect academic and professional staff engaged and interested in work integrated learning from across all universities and higher education providers in Queensland.

The UQ Student Employability Centre promotes and coordinates a number of initiatives which seek to strengthen the range of global, professional and leadership experiences offered to students. Our goal is to maximize the student experience and enhance employability through a range of experiences, services and funding including global experiences, undergraduate research, student leadership, professional and practical experiences and careers support.
